A new book by Alan Garner is a rare and precious thing. Garner (now in his eighties) takes his time hewing his books from his life as his ancestors hewed rocks. Where shall we run to is a series of autobiographical vignettes from around the time of the second world war, told simply, but with great beauty, in the voice of a child.

I loved its English folklore and was enchanted by the fantasy. Still, it came as a surprise to me when at teachers' college studying children's literature, I was introduced to Red Shift (1973). That book didn't strike me as one I might ...
