D&D is much more about exploring "fantasy" as a broad genre. Old clerics were kind of Crystal Dragon Jesus (that is, modeled on medieval Christianity but with fantasy stuff) and followed some obscure rules from real history. Nowadays, you can make clerics dedicated to all kinds of gods, including gods who love axes.

A cleric chooses two domains from among those belonging to his deity. A cleric can select an alignment domain (Chaos, Evil, Good, or Law) only if his alignment matches that domain. If a cleric is not devoted to a particular deity, he still selects two domains to represent his spiritual inclinations and abilities.

Cleric. When a cleric takes up an adventuring life, it is usually because his or her god demands it. The goals of the deities require that they have mortal agents in the world, and pursuing those goals often involves braving the dangers beyond the walls of civilization and security, smiting evil or seeking holy relics in ancient tombs.

The Undying Light warlock is not a great combo with a cleric really, since you'd have to have a decent Charisma in addition to Wisdom. You'd be better off picking a domain that grants bonus damage to cantrips and just stick with the Wisdom spells.

Tips for a Life Cleric? : dndnext - reddit

In D&D, the cleric is a healer, spellcaster, and sometimes melee fighter. It is a fantasy reimagining of the holy orders of the Knights Templar and Hospitaller of medieval times. As the game has evolved, much of its power now comes through the specific focus of its worship, which is represented mechanically by the Cleric Domain system.
