My TED talk. How can we do the most good for the world? In this talk, I introduce the idea of effective altruism, arguing that we should focus on problems that are large in scale, solvable, and neglected, and that one of our top global priorities should be to safeguard humanity's vast and extraordinary future.

Our latest Freakonomics Radio episode is called "Does Doing Good Give You License to Be Bad?" (You can subscribe to the podcast at Apple Podcasts, Stitcher, or elsewhere, get the RSS feed, or listen via the media player above.). Corporate Social Responsibility programs can attract better job applicants who'll work for less money. But they also encourage employees to misbehave.

It's often said that it's better to give than receive but did you know that this is actually backed up by research? While many of us feel too stressed and busy to worry about helping others, or say we'll focus on doing good deeds when we have more 'spare time', evidence shows that helping others is actually beneficial for your own mental health and wellbeing.

The power of self-reflection is simple but mighty. It's how you recognize and celebrate progress, gain nourishing motivation, and detach from the workday. Successful people like David Heinemeier Hansson and Marc Andreessen use this tactic to keep their momentum going while managing the pressure of always having more work to do. But like most activities that aren't yet a daily habit, even ...

The good deed and the evil deed cannot be equal. Repel (the evil) with one which is better (i.e. Allah orders the faithful believers to be patient at the time of anger, and to excuse those who treat them badly) then verily he, between whom and you there was enmity, (will become) as though he was a close friend.
