Galatea 2.2 by Richard Powers Posted on February 6, 2019 by VN Alexander I happen to be contemplating these days how Artificial Intelligence (AI) differs from Biological Intelligence (BI), and so I finally took down Galatea 2.2 (F5&G, 329 pages) from my bookshelf where it has stood waiting for me for about fifteen years.

Galatea 2.2 by Richard Powers | Dactyl Review

I am highly recommending Galatea 2.2, the newest book from the author Richard Powers. Powers writes dense books with multiple story lines that wrap themselves around each other like a double helix. Typically, his books weave these two stories (usually featuring different points in time) into a fascinating tapestry that holds the reader's interest until the very last page.
