Recently worked on a Lenovo G505 which has weird issue. I new it was booting by using an external monitor but laptop screen was blank. Only way to get correct boot so that laptop screen display is visible (including Lenovo splash screen, and incidentally, the webcam to be recognised correctly in device manager) is to press power on button and immediately close the laptop lid and reopen it.

In a Lenovo G585 with Windows 8 installed, I can not connect to Wi-Fi networks. I see that there is no button to turn on the Wi-Fi. After googling I found that Lenovo's don't offer such a button and I need to press Fn+F5.. Pressing Fn+F5, I see the option to enable Airplane Mode On/Off and it says that there is no wireless access enabled but there is no option to connect to a network.

Some Lenovo laptops have a second button next to the power button. Instead of pressing the function keys you actually have to just press the second button which has a u-turn arrow on it; it will give you a list of options (Bios, Boot menu, normal boot). I was also trying to press F2, F10 and also trying with the FN button without success.
