Begging the Question. A form of circular reasoning in which a conclusion is derived from premises that presuppose the conclusion. Normally, the point of good reasoning is to start out at one place and end up somewhere new, namely having reached the goal of increasing the degree of reasonable belief in the conclusion.

An appeal to nature is an argument or rhetorical tactic in which it is proposed that "a thing is good because it is 'natural', or bad because it is 'unnatural ' ". It can be a bad argument, because the implicit (unstated) primary premise "What is natural is good" typically is irrelevant, having no cogent meaning in practice, or is an opinion instead of a fact.

Notes: This is the usual name given this fallacy, for instance: W. L. Reese calls it: "The Argument from False Cause", see his Dictionary of Philosophy and Religion: Eastern and Western Thought (1980), p. 168. Some authors describe the fallacy as that of inferring that something causes something else when it doesn't, an interpretation encouraged by the fallacy's name and alias—see above.

History of logic - Medieval logic: As the Greco-Roman world disintegrated and gave way to the Middle Ages, knowledge of Greek declined in the West. Nevertheless, several authors served as transmitters of Greek learning to the Latin world. Among the earliest of them, Cicero (106–43 bce) introduced Latin translations for technical Greek terms.
