Before we dive into the local notification tutorial, let's first talk about the history. Way back in iOS 3.0, Apple introduced the Push Notification Service (APNS) to bring the multitasking support to its mobile operating system. At that time, due to the nature of iOS, only one application is allowed to run in the foreground.

I believe the new widgets are great if you have a 5.5" screen iPhone, otherwise it's a inexplicable waste of space. But change an already natural gesture it's extremely frustrating especially for those who owns non-Touch-ID devices (like iPhone 5 and iPad mini 2 owners): they cannot slide to unlock anymore and have to press twice the Home button to reveal the numpad.

Anyhoo, I ran across the old language question again because I finally tried my hand at Android development. I have an iOS client for my old game Wyvern, and I decided somewhat recently to take the plunge and write an Android version. I didn't realize that it would turn into a language question (as in, "What the hell am I doing with my life?")
