Every writer has a dream. The dream is to not have to sell yourself — to just write and have the readers, agents, and publishers come to you. No hoopla or marketing gimmicks. Just good writing that gets its due. Most of us would rather not worry about promotion. We wonder:

Every Writer's Dream: How to Never Pitch Your Writing Again

Stephen King on writing and dreaming. Writers and creatives are often advised to take a pencil and notepad with them to bed, not only because this can help us to fall asleep when our minds are whirring; but also because those moments before sleep are those when new ideas are most likely to pop into our heads.
